DEATH OF LIEUT. GOVERNOR BUNN.

Oscar J. Dunn, Lieutenant Governor of Louisiana, died at his residence on Dauphine street, on Thursday morning at 6 o'clock. He had been suffering for some time with a kidney disease, which baffled the skill of the physicians to keep him with us. On Wednesday, Dr. E. D. Beach, one of the physicians, was called in consultation. It was then seen that death was caused by congestion of the brain. Mr. Dunn was a representative man among the colored people of the State and exercised a large influence, not only in political matters, but in all matters of ordinary interest. He was a clear-headed, hard-working man. While in the Senate he conducted himself with great discretion and dignity, and was universally respected by his colleagues. As President of the Senate he presided with a promptness and a spirit of fairness which could scarcely have been expected from one who had had little or no experience in deliberative assemblies. It is generally admitted that he exercised a restraining influence upon his race who had been so suddenly clothed with the full rights of citizenship, and who had been to make.

What effect his death will have upon the political aspect of affairs remains to be seen. Some think that it will work no change in the order of succession of that portion of the Republican party with which he and Kellogg have been so soon now existing. Others think differently. It is stated that Governor Warmoth intends to declare an extra session of the Legislature for the purpose of filling the vacancy. We subjoin the text of the law bearing upon this subject:

Section 1566 R. S. and Supplement. In case of a vacancy in the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall act as Governor; in case of a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor; and in case of a vacancy in the office of President of the Senate, the Secretary of State shall act as President pro tempore of the Senate.

The Times-Democrat says:

Among other matters of interest connected with the death of Lieutenant Governor Dunn, is the fact that by the Constitution of this State, the President of the Senate succeeds to the office of Governor, in case of the death, resignation or disability of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor.
