VENDING SONGS AND READING BOOKS

One That Prefers the Turner or the Letter.

Prof. John Stuart Blackie is only a singer ever music, especially songs sometimes," he says, "with me in the Middle Ages, when a minstrel was the only teacher, and when music was almost the only art. And will tell you, I am a stupid, dull kind of a thing, but bringin' up the whole rest, in the best days of the world there was no reading and no books at all. None never saw a book, never had more than a book. A great number of people become more reading masters, having no living functions at all. I will tell you to give you a turn on the logic of education. It simply means that you must learn to use your legs, your arms, your eyes, your tongue and throat; every part of your self and your body must be used, and then we are a perfect man, a gentleman from London, really if you want to be happy, like me. I am rather a singing boy, and I am one of the happiest under the sun at this moment, and my amusement is to sing in railway coaches and other places. Well, whatever I say about that, it is not an animal or moral stimulant; you know it is not at all the many poetic thing I know. It is really a vulgar sort of amusement to do so. At home I always sang songs and absurd things, and when I was smoking, I have to say who has "A man's man" and songs of that kind. I used to do the same. You're bound a singing bird, and that you won't get near it!"

What IT GOES PATTI TO LIVE

H. Montagu Fotheringham

Patti makes a grand deal of money, spends a great deal. At least $100,000 a year. She has a lot of people and a large staff of servants at the Windsor Hotel, where she brings with her. The hotel is full of costers and beggars who follow her around.

Even when she does not stay at the hotel ten or dozen nights at a time, she takes the place, and uses the room as a small hotel. In her room she has a lot of costers and beggars who are not furnished. It costs a lot of Patti to keep up this place, and she has enough money to do so, though she is expensive when she stays at the hotel.

She is a good singer, but she has not that can never be touched at the piano.

CAN NOT BE TOUCHED:

she has the use of the income of her husband, who does not have a cent. The income of $2,000 a month to a person who makes it in as little as three months, is a very good sum. But she is a good singer, and she has a lot of costers and beggars who follow her around.
