Suppose the U.S. it Now York is a constructed by the control that the control

The statement purposes to be produced on enarticle first published in the Journal of Commerce, on the 13th June and on another in the Florida Herald on the June and on another in the Florida Herald on the June and on another in the Florida Herald on the June and on another in the Florida Herald on the that amount, and certainly it is asserted that the prices which are put up at $1,500,000 are not worth that following that amount, and certainly it is well known that it is COUNCIL OF FIRST MUNICIPALITY.

The accounts by the Siddens, arrived yesterday, are far from cheering. The British money market was under source pressure. It was difficult to procure was under severe pressure. It was difficult to procur it on the 13th of June on the most approved stocks a five per cent. Large sales of the Bank of England stock had been effected at a decline of one and a half percent, and it was generally believed that the bank and thus curtailed its revenue? What practical man does not know the effect of such a state of things in England, upon the business operations of our con-try? It is true that, in active, prosperous times, when money passes rapidly from hand to hand, the effect is not so evident, as in a dull season, and when trade is in a lethargic state; but yet it is silently, though certainly operating.

Steam navigation has brought the London and Liverproof markets about as near to New York, as New Orleans. And can it be possible, that we are not to feel, most sensibly, the demand for mency in Great Britain? Must it not depreciate the nominal value of American accurities, whether in the shape of stocks or sterling bohds? Is not the British market inundated sterling bohds? Is not the British market inundated with them? And is there not a very large amount in the hands of American agents, daily offered for sale, or to be hypothecated? And what can we, rationally, anticipate from this source, but disappointment in somegand great sacrifices in other instances? I regres to say? Bay mind is prepared for painful results—not that there is to be, in England, an increased demand for muney. A continuance-of the present demand (which we are just beginning to feet) must operate disastrously upon us, and it is this that I feet, and to used such a contingency, predest men. as far as practicasuch a contingency, prudent men, as far as practice ble ought to be prepared.

But this is not the only point of apprehension. Th parket for our great staple (cotton) was in a very cri-ical state. At the date of our last British accounts, i tical state. At the date of our last Striam accounts, it was not known that there had been any decline is price in the American market. The sales effected in Liverpool in Juns, were predicated upon the highest prices in this country for weeks preceding. I think, therefore, that the probability is, that cotton was not therefore, that the probability is, that cotton was not as high as on the jist of July, as on the 10th of June and that the demand for it was more likely to have did minished than increased. I fear, also, the effects of dictice cotton circular, In it I have never had the least confidence. It is unnecessary to discuss the question whether the crop is, or is not short! The impression among consumers is, that it is a full avarage crop.—The only chance of attaining the present price in Liverpool is, that the holders should keep it out of the market. Can this be done, during the present scarcity of money! I think not. To these conclusions I have some, after mature reflection; and was I dealer in the in time try, the reserve of cotton, for the week catting last night, have been about 3,700 bales, at a decline of nearly one-quarter of a cent on an avarage. There will now be but little done, until one of the steam ships ross Liverposol arrives.
