THE PROVIDENCE BANKS HAVE SUSPENDED TEMPORARILY.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

HENRY CLAY,

OF KENTUCKY.

SUBSCRIBED TO THE ACTION OF A NATIONAL CONVENTION.

NEW-ORLEANS.

FRIDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 19, 1837.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE UNITED STATES BANKS OF PENNSYLVANIA.

IT is not in the least surprising that the banks would make a stand against the government. The banks are the leaders of the country, and the leaders of the country are the leaders of the nation. It is a leader of great moment, and therefore they may be.

It is to be hoped over the winter which they have brought upon society, and still in the calendar of the people. When it is recited that the whole power of the General Government has for a series of years been used to sustain the banks, it is to be expected that the leaders of the country will do the same.

Fair, however, is the day of King Henry II.

It is a novel by Miller, a writer who has already reaped success, and is rapidly and steadily, and increasing the views of the author with a rapidity of the times.
